Susan “Suzi” Foster Voyles

Susan, “Suzi” Voyles, is a longtime resident of the City of Sandy Springs, Georgia and was involved in its move for independence from the City of Atlanta. The belief that government closest to the people is the best form of governance is a legacy passed down through multiple generations of her family. On her father’s side, she traces her roots to the Fullers who sailed over on the Mayflower in order to worship freely in a Reformed manner (they were Puritans on the ship), to family who were instrumental in the founding documents and principles of these United States.

Suzi graduated from the College of Idaho and completed her Master’s Degree from the University of Southern California. Involvement in the political process began for her when she was four years old and walked precincts with her father. Even more importantly, she was taught the history of these United States and America’s heroes as her grandfather read to her and passed on the principles by which this country was conceived. As a student, a chance meeting with then Governor Ronald Reagan turned into an opportunity for a longtime friendship. He was instrumental in helping her form ideas of her own on foreign policy and finance, including what is and what is not the government’s role in both. He also helped her form a style of leadership that incorporated the educating of others toward different points of view and that hostility usually is not productive.

Suzi was named as the State Director in Georgia for Maggie’s List in 2011. Maggie’s List is a Federal PAC that supports women candidates who believe in less government, fiscal conservatism and strong national security. She also serves on the National Board of Directors for Maggie’s List. Currently, she serves as the President of Eagle Forum and handles policy advocacy with the Heritage Foundation and the Family Research Council. She is a Past-President of the Georgia Federation of Republican Women and finds the principles she learned at home and from her time with Reagan to be most helpful in trying to build a national and statewide network that sees and acts upon the urgent issues facing our State and Country. She is often called upon to write editorials on Conservative Women in politics.

Her unwavering support for our military continues as she serves on the Birdwell Foundation for military and first responders who are in crisis. The Foundation aims to support all who suffer from combat related PTSD and MST.

Suzi is current employed by the J. L. Williamson Law Group specializing in Asset Protection, Elder Law and Taxation Needs. She has served as an election poll manager in Fulton County, Georgia for over twenty years. Most recently, she has often been called upon to serve as an election security expert for states and local governments.

Suzi and her husband, Jim, have three daughters, two sons-in-law, three granddaughters and a grandson. They engage in their community of Sandy Springs and are members of Mount Vernon Baptist Church. She enjoys playing the piano. In her spare time she relaxes by working in her garden, reading and teaching United States History, Georgia History, American Literature and Logic to home-educated students. She is an active judge in the Metro Atlanta Forensics Club. Suzi is on the National Board of Directors for the Keep Nine Coalition to propose and support legislation toward an amendment keeping the integrity of an independent SCOTUS (with Edwin Meese), Georgia Home School Association, Daughters of the American Revolution, Eagle Forum and P.E.O. Additional associations upon request. The Voyles have a Cocker Spaniel.
